Dear Sir:

You have requested my advice as to whether a person may appeal from a revocation of a hunting license, after investigation and hearing, under the provisions of RSA 214:18.

It is my opinion that you may revoke a hunting license, for a period longer than thirty days, after investigation and hearing by the Commission, and such revocation is not subject to review. However, it is possible that the former licensee may seek a review of your action so that a complete record of the investigation and hearing should be retained to establish, if necessary, the reasonableness of your actions.

Very truly yours,

Arthur E. Bean, Jr.
Assistant Attorney General
